JOHN A BAD HUSBAND

The Orientals Make the Worst Husban is in the World.

WOMEN MAKE GOOD WIVES

Their Children Are Puny and Die Young-The Experience of Some European Girls in Japan.

The engagement of Commander William Whiting, U. S. N., to Mise Ah-long, the full-blooded Chinese daugh-or of wealthy Celestial parents, is for-ually announced. Naturally, the discussion as to whether marriages be-tween Caucasians and Orientale can have a happy lasse has become more animated than over.

"Almost all such unions have been unhappy in their results," are the the words used in the resolution passed by the congress of the great heads of the Mohammedan church in India, when in session at Delhi, in condemning the frequency of unions between Europeans and Asiation. This verdict of grave and reverend signors of In-lam is almost identical, word for lam is almost identical, word for word, with expressions of opinion upon this same subject uttered during the past decade by both the spiritual and temporal authorities of China, Jupan, Slam and Coohin China. And, although they refer more especially to matrimonial alliances of people of their race and creed with Europeans, yet the matter is one which likewise concerns the United States. For there is an increasing tendency on the part of the fair daughters of Uncle Sam to ally their destinies to those of Orientals, and it was but last mouth that a high-bred and accomplished lady of Norwich, Conn., the daughter of a man who had been one of the most prominent and widely known citizens of the town, became the wife of a Mongolian formerly attached to the Chinese legation at Washington. This is but one tion at Washington. This is but one of a large number of similar unions which take place every year, and I remember, a couple of years ago when my attention was called to the marriage at Philadelphia of the daugh-

Japanese convert to Quakerism, my toquiring of some of the bride's relatives what means they had taken to ascertain the nature of her future existence in Japan as the foreign wife of a na-tive, without being able to obtain any antiefactory reply to my question. Having made several prolonged stays both in China and Japan, and having seen more of native life there than fulls to the lot of most foreigners, I cannot but view with misgiving the fature of those roung American girls who are led either by fondness of motorlaty, sentimental extravagance, auntic craze, or seere feminine contractures but certainly not downright, honest, steadfast love-to confer their hands upon members of the Asiatin race.

My experience, in common with that of other white men latimately acquainted with the Orient and the maserial and mental misery of the large number of poor, deluded white girls living in China, Japon, India and the Lorunt, as the wives of Asiation, leads me to condemn in the strongest manner all intermarriage between the children of the west and three of the east, and I should feel relieved to know that anything that I could write or say has served to discourage unnatural unions of this character.

That they are confrary to nature is attracted by the physical and moral soudition of the large resulting ther from it is a well-known and curious fact that not one of the everal thousand children born of Japanese mothers and white fathers, or the nighty or a hundred infanta hows of Japanese fathers and white mothers has ever lived to reach the age of eighteen. Nor are the offspring of the allianous between the Chinese and the European races more fortunate. Creek through it may appear to advance each aretiments. I run only express regret that the occalled Eurasians to not suffer from a similar promature mortality. The result of unions beween the whitee and the Indians or Malays, they are not only physically the most inferior of all human types, but are morally the most confemptible and hauset of markind. In the city of Singapore alone there are no less than ber then sand of these Eurasians degrated dominant view of both the white and the dusky races, while in ligitish India, where they number several million, and where they are despised by whites and full-blooded Opentals alias, they constitute a growing source of embarrament to the government indeed, the so-called Ecracian question is one of the most difficult of all the problems with which the viceroj of Oteen Victoria's great castern dethe problems with which the viceroj of Queen Victoria's great castern de-pendency is called upon to deal. There is one thing to which I should like to particularly draw attention, namely, that is all my experience I have never known a single case of a respectable white girl who was al-resdy acquainted with Asiatic life and who had previously resided in the who had previously resided in the Orient, marrying an Asiatic. They know too well the fate which awaits them. They dread the ostracism by both white and reputable native society which such a marriage would inevitably entail upon them. They are materangers to the very serious shortomings as regards morality, manner and principle of every member of the Asiastic race. All the white wives of the latter that I have ever known of have been women altogether ignorant of the Orient, and whose knowledge of the latter was derived entirely from poetry, and from the florid and pic-uresque lies—true Oriential embroid-eries—of theirdusky suitors. These latter are all, according to their own stories, noblemen or princes of their own country possessed of rank, wealth and getates as imaginary as the traditional castles in Spain.

Among the principal unions between Orientals and whites that have come Orientals and whites that have come under my notice is that of Baroness ron Rahden, a 'ady well known in court circles at Berlin and related to many of the grandest families of Germany, who married the Japanese Count Aoki, during the latter's residence on the banks of the Spree as minister plenipotentiary of the mikade. The popular, and had but little prospect of securing a husband among the men of er own race and rank. Under the mstances, it is possible that she may have been attracted by the liberal salary and allowance of Aoki, as well as by the prestige and privileges which he enjoyed at Berlin as the chief of a foreign mission. It is manifest that some considerations such as these must have constituted the motive which induced her to marry bim. It the Society of Friends to a certainly cannot have been love or admiration, for he is as Ill-favored and in every respect deficient in physique as the majority of his race. The union excited a good deal of ridicule and disgust at Berlin, but, as the wife of a foreign envoy, she continued to be received at any rate by official society. It was not, however, until her husband was recalled to Japan that she realized the folly of which she had been guilty in marrying him. On reaching the far east she discovered to her cost that the Japanese ambassadrese at Berlin and Mrs. Aoki at Tokio were two very different persons. The ma-jority of the white women in Japan turned their backs upon her in undis-guised seorn, while those who did condescend to take any notice of her were careful to make her feel that they were conferring a great favor in tolerating her at all. This, of course, did not tend to inerease her prestige in the eyes either of her husband or of his country people, and her position became one great misery. Moreover, although the mikado's officials draw large pay and allowances while representing him abroad they receive but very small entaries at home; and, as Aoki had no fortune of his own, the financial advantages which he possessed in her eyes at the time of the marriage disappeared. Her demandaeven for the most elementary comforts of sivilized life constituted a drain upon his shallow purse which he could not but resent. Nor did her constant dissatisfaction with the primitive character of her surroundings contribute to increase his domestic happiness, added to which he gradually commenced to neglast those sourcesies and attentions which, while in Europe, he had been accustomed to pay his wife. Neither the Japanese nor the Chinese, nor, in-duct, any of the Anatic races enter-deed, any of the Asiatic races cotertain any respect for women, whose at heart they regard as creatures of altogether inferior intelligence, resembling brutes in being without a soul.

Thus, it is almost impossible to bring any netraveled Oriental to comprehend the deference which the men of civilized nations pay to women.

The latter, in his eyes, are solely fitted to act as the servants—nay, even, as the slaves—of the stronger ser. Seldom, if ever, is the native wife permitted to sit at table with her husband, no matter now high her rank, and when admitted to his presence
she is forced by etiquette to approach and when admitted to his presence she is forced by etiquette to approach in the same manner as domestics, namely, on all fours, with repeated prostrations. I remember how star-tled I was at the manner in which tled I was at the manner in which Sane Tsunetami, formerly ambassador at Vienna, but now vice president of the senate, made me acquainted with his wife at a dinner which he gave in my honor shortly after my arrival in Japan. The repast was served European fashion and it was a star party. Towards the close of the dinner, a sliding door or screen was pushed aside and there crawled in, with repeated prostrations, first of all at old lady, who was his legitimate wife and of lofty birth, then the plebeian lady who filled the role of Hagur in the household of this Japanese Abraham, and then the children of both women. I, in my ignorance of the social usages and then the children of both women.

I, in my ignorance of the social usages of the country, was about to rise and bow to the ladies, but my neighbor pressed me down saying: "Don't stir," while our host, jerking his thumb contemptnously over his shoulder towards the woman exclaimed: "My wife," and then motioned to them to retire, which they did forthwith in the same manner in which they had entered. So much for Oriental respect for women.

for Oriental respect for women.

If I have drawn special attentions to the miseries of the union of Baronese Rahden to "Count" Aoki, whose rank was authentic and who, as Asiatics go, was an exemplary Jap, it is with the object of showing how infinitely more unhappy is the fate of those white girls wedded to Oriental husbands less highly placed, and I shalf never forget the aspect of the broken spirited and wretched London girk hailing from Bloomsbury, who had been induced to become the wife of a man named Minami while the latter was occupying the post of vice consult in the British metropolis. As long as they remained in London everything went well, but when he was recalled and took her back with him to Japan, where I first saw her, hor miseries began.

Asiatics have no sense of decency, as we understand the word, and any white girl who takes up her residence any-where in the Orient must be prepared to have her sense of delicacy and pro-priety shocked and offended at every

In Japan men and women think nothing of performing their most inti-mate ablutions in the public street, and in China, Siam, India, etc., the people are most primitive in their ideas as to the requisite amount of dress demanded by conventionallty, many of them dispensing even with the breech clout. Folygamy is rampant throughout the east, no mutter what the creed, and most of the Asiatic nations, notably for the English word chastity. When to all this is added the assurance that the most vanuted civilization of the Orientals, particularly of the Japanese, is nothing more than a mere vencer, devoid of any basis or foundation, and but thinly covering all the native vices peculiar to the Oriental character, American and European parents may well ponder and hesitate before permitting their daughters to mate Asi-

Only the other day the English papers contained a story of a young girl of Newcastle who had foolishly accepted an offer of marriage from a you Chinese naval officer, named Ling, who had been sent to Europe to study gunnery. All protests on the part of her parents were silenced by the apparent sincerity of his attachment and by the fact that he professed to be a Coristian. His mansion in China was most impressively described, and the girl's parents were asked to picture her living in the most elegant of Oriental luxury amid orange groves and plants of exquisite beauty. The infatuated girl threw in her lot with that of the Celestial and started with him for China. Two years later she was sent home by one of the missionary societies at Shanghai, a mental and physical wreck, the mission-aries reporting that she had first been neglected, then ill-treated and finally abandoned by her Chinese husband, who possessed already a Chinese wife at the time of his marriage in England. This is only one of a thousand similar cases, and I hear that the adventisement which is hear that the advertisement which appeared in some of the London papers three months ago to the effect that a rajah of the Bengul province and "a respectable Indian gentleman" desired to correspond with respectable Euro-pean young ladies with a view to marringe, has received an immense number of answers from girls and parents of every class of society. Some of these women who contract alliances with Orientals become lost to sight forever after their marriage, and I know of at least a dozen instances where this has been the case, and where the relatives of the girl have every reason to bolleve that she had perished.
